Naples, FL (PRWeb) March 12, 2008 -- Furniture Sox, LLC announces a new mom-invented floor protector that has taken the mompreneur from the Parent, Teacher Organization (PTO) to the United States Patent and Trademark Office (USPTO). Nancy Rondina, a stay at home mom and former PTO president, has invented a new patent-pending solution for floor protection. Furniture Sox, LLC has just recently made the Furniture Sox® products available through the website <http://www.furnituresox.com>.

Wondering why her hardwood floors were getting scratched, Nancy discovered that the adhesive was failing on the felt pads that were being used to protect the floors. She came up with her own solution, an attractive furniture sock that fits over the end of the furniture legs. "When using Furniture Sox®, with just a glance, you can feel confident that your floors are protected," states Nancy Rondina, Founder and President of Furniture Sox, LLC. "It's especially important when there are children in the house."

According to research, hard surface flooring is gaining in market share with more and more people choosing it for their homes and offices. This is making the need for floor protection even more relevant. Not properly protecting hard surface flooring will cause it to become damaged and may lead to a need for premature replacement which is a waste of our natural resources. Hard surface flooring includes hardwood floors, tile, stone, laminates, and vinyl, all of which can be scratched.

"It seems like a natural solution, they are easy to use and the stylish design goes with any decor," says Nancy. One of the companies first customers is quoted as saying, "I knew what I wanted and I thought of socks so I googled 'furniture socks' and found you on the first page of my search. You have a very cute website-very easy to use."

"We were pleasantly surprised to find that people were looking for our products before they knew that they existed," says Nancy.
